Function and Design

A large room made to house NDC power armor; each individual armor is stored in a place on special racks, these racks are designed to keep the armor stationary until it is equipped by a pilot. The power armor bays are usually built alongside hangar bays with one side of the room facing the outside of the starship so that it can open, allowing easy access to outside the ship. The power armor bay is stockpiled with supplies and equipment stored in lockers built into the side of each rack to maintain each individual suit of armor for combat or other operations.

Appearance

The bay is shaped like a hexagon that is divided into sections shaped like triangles. Four of these sections are dedicated to power armor storage. One is used as a maintenance area equipped with tool lockers and stations that help disassemble the power armor for repair. The final section is used for deployment, by way of a large bay door that leads into open space.
