Pre-Military

Prior to her military career, Gisel was the 'baby' of a brood of seven, with five older sisters and two older brothers. Gisel was somewhat pampered by her father, teased by her sisters, and ran wild with her brothers. Being the daughter of the Matriarch of the household gave her some broader freedoms than her siblings, and at the sametime stricter training and learning as her mother was almost a carbon-copy of her own mother, and Gisel's grandmother to whom she was gifted with her first name as her middle,

'Wilhelmina'. Wilhelmina had been a strict parent, doling out rewards on exemplary work but brooked no nonsense while she taught her brood the ways of survival. In a way, her mother was trying to mold Gisel into something 'more' than she thought she could be. When it came time for her Coming of Age Ceremony, the first trial was the first time she'd ever been to the surface. Awestruck, Gisel was almost baffled by the endless tract of the sky overhead and the rolling hills.

Having completed the first of the trials, her father, Karsten took a leave of absence from his duties to perform the second. While a doting father, and rock of her life, he did not go easy on her. Bruised, aching and through sheer dumb luck she held her own against her old man until finally it was over.

Her mother however had a more brutal task in mind for her third trial. It was a right mostly held for only Abwehran males. Tyrani hunting. She was forced into joining a group of males on the hunt. It did not go so well. One of the males died as a small griff descended on them. With one of their number dead within moments, some fought, and two ran for their lives. Gisel remained with those that stayed, watching a few more comrades get injured and another having been grievously injured. Why her mother had sent her on this near suicidal task was something that almost appalled her. But she held firm. She fought, she survived, and she won. From then on, she was considered an adult by her family. Nor did her sisters tease her anymore for even though she was the 'baby' and daughter of the matriarch she'd proven herself.

Military

Gisel's military career began a mere thirteen months ago like any other. The marked exception is she went off into a specialized school for Heavy Weaponry and that of Demolitions for the majority of her training. Near the end, Gisel was a participant in one of the war games usually held to show the competence of the newest batch of recruits before being given the rank of Maat. After passing, she is currently awaiting her first assignment.
