Physical Description

In stark contrast to some foxes in her vicinity, Auli'I possesses a diminutive stature, barely reaching the height of 152.4cm (5ft). This distinctive attribute can be attributed to her lineage tracing back to the fennec fox. Her distinguishing canine ears, reminiscent of those of a fennec fox, elegantly emerge from beneath her hair. Typically, she takes great care to keep her hair away from her visage, meticulously grooming it for ease of management. As is common among anthropomorphic beings, her body is entirely cloaked in fur. Her back is adorned with a sandstone-colored coat, while a white hue adorns the region from her chin down to her nether regions, resembling the fur of a red fox. A brown fur, closely resembling that on her feet, graces her arms and legs, culminating just above her elbows, imparting the appearance of extended latex gloves favored by certain partygoers.

Notably, her mouth is equipped with fangs, occasionally revealed during speech or moments of astonishment and concentration. Her eyes possess a striking crimson hue, which, when subjected to dimly lit environments, emits a subtle, almost imperceptible, luminescence when closely examined. Thanks to her furry covering, climatic concerns are largely unfounded, allowing Auli'I to favor lightweight, custom-made attire that accommodates her tail with ease.

Dark markings encircle her eyes, contrasting noticeably with the tone of her hands. Auli'I sports a single, two-foot-long tail, adorned with a distinctive ring. In dry conditions, her fur conceals embedded metal recesses and seams, ingeniously designed to facilitate the emergence of her claws. The apex of her tail boasts a vibrant red hue, lending it a unique and eye-catching quality.

Personality

She's quite clever, much like how foxes are often portrayed. She possesses self-awareness and a sense of sentience that rivals any human. Unaware of her clone status, she believes she's the result of an uplifting experiment. She has little interest in delving into her past and finds contentment in her current circumstances.

Her upbringing has left her with some conflicting influences. Growing up in the Iron Company's ranks instilled some of their behavior in her, but being around Tacho also had an impact on her communication style.

As a young fox, Auli'I developed a taste for trying out new foods, even if they were neither edible nor healthy. This led to her collecting peculiar carcasses and labeling them as food items. In the past, her curiosity would often divert the attention of those around her, prompting them to stop what they were doing to intervene and prevent her from attempting to eat strange things.

Auli'I holds a deep respect for everyone in the Iron Company, and she assigns them special nicknames, much like a character from an anime. She considers Tacho as her mother, though legally adopted or not, and she affectionately calls the Iron Company's Grandmaster "papa" while referring to the other members as her big brothers or big sisters. Despite her immaturity, she occasionally challenges Tacho and a few others to a "Mouth Off Contest," a playful competition where they engage in creative and good-natured banter using rude or crude language.

History

The story of Auli'I<sup>(2)</sup> began differently from most Biologicals.

Origins

Auli'I came into existence within the sterile environment of a cutting-edge cloning facility located on Station Omacron, on 17日 9月 YE 44. Her creation was a consequence of acquiring new genetic material during the Durandium Phoenix Shakedown<sup>(3)</sup>. Auli'I's genetic makeup was a blend of various fox types, including the standard fox and some  fennec fox traits. The cloning procedure was advancing smoothly until a series of unforeseen malfunctions disrupted the process. Consequently, Auli'I's early developmental stage as a fox baby was abruptly interrupted, and she was unexpectedly expelled from her cloning tank.

The Departure

The incident caused the clone to find herself alone and confused in the laboratory, but also curious of her surroundings. This caused her to begin wondering around the lab before anyone could realize what had happened, the fox baby clone wandered out of the laboratory and inadvertently stumbled upon a shipping crate destined for a certain military group called the Iron Company. Due to a mix-up in labeling, the crate was mistakenly loaded onto a transport ship, unknowingly carrying the young clone with it<sup>(4)</sup>.

Hello Fam!

Few Hours later, upon their arrival on an Iron Company base in the Njord System, they opened the crate, revealing the unexpected presence of a fox baby clone, much to the surprise of the soldiers, especially Tacho. To everyone's astonishment, the little one had devoured most of the food inside the crate. At first, confusion and concern clouded the atmosphere due to this unforeseen arrival. However, as they observed her innocent and inquisitive nature, the members of the group began to form a strong bond with the young clone.

The clone, devoid of any memory or knowledge about her origin, was bestowed the name “Auli’i” by one of the members, drawing inspiration from a planet within the Iron Company's home territory. Despite her accidental appearance, she swiftly endeared herself to the group and became a cherished and valuable member, thanks to her intelligence, adaptability, and unique abilities.

Life

YE 44 18. Recognizing Auli'i's potential, the leadership of the Iron Company decided to provide her with specialized training. They tailored her education and combat skills to complement her natural instincts, successfully unlocking her full potential. During this process, they also observed her rapid maturation, which progressed at a rate similar to that of the Nekovalkyrja. It appeared as though she started speaking within a mere day, influenced by Tacho.

Under the guidance of experienced instructors, Auli'i honed her combat skills, marksmanship, and tactical expertise. She proved to be an exceptional asset to the company, demonstrating an uncanny ability to move stealthily, utilize heightened senses, and exhibit incredible agility.

Role

YE 45 As Auli'i matured within the group, her curiosity about her past grew steadily. Because she was an anthro with fading memories of a lab, some members of the Iron Company believed she might have been the result of an uplifting experiment. This curiosity drove her to seek her own path and define her identity beyond the circumstances of her creation. Consequently, her integration into the Iron Company continued, and her role evolved from being an accidental addition to becoming a respected member. Her unique abilities, coupled with her unwavering loyalty and dedication, earned her the trust and respect of her fellow soldiers.

Her agility, heightened senses, and empathy allowed her to navigate challenging terrain and establish connections with local wildlife, which proved valuable for gathering intelligence during missions. Additionally, she decided to focus on Technician roles, enabling her to provide services that benefitted her new home. During the company's latest mission<sup>5)</sup>, she worked diligently in the Engineering department.
