Character Summary

The Type Three stands at 6'1" with an outer shell and inner components.

Her outer shell is mostly sleek metal and chrome plates that have been polished to a shine. While these plates do denote a feminine form, it is lacking in the glaring female features. Gear cogs at the joins for her elbows and knees decorate the plates, while a single gear attached to a chain around her neck denotes her allegiance. While the outer shell does cover most of her body, it stops at her above her collarbone to leave her neck and head visible.

The inner components of Honey are far more complex and are lines of wires, tubes, and steel rods to keep her up and going. This odd arrangment of technology does end where her neck and chin meet, leaving the human mouth and nose quite intact. Though the modifications do wrap around the back of her head replacing it all with modern technology that would be needed. Ears replaced with microphones that can be adjusted to pick up faint sounds (or mumbling), hair replaced with wires that can be plugged in for a faster connection within Arsenal, and a metal rectangle over her eyes where five replacement eyes are watching and gathering information about her surroundings.

Honey operates with a polite and pleasant manner towards those that she a diplomat to but that is a front for the harsh relentless Freespaceer to those that know her better within the Polysentience. Cinereal gave her the name "Honey" after the saying "You can catch more flies with honey than with vinegar." Guarded when it comes to Freespaceer tech, she wishes nothing but the best for the Astral Locksmiths, and by extension the Freespaceers as a whole.

History

Honey started out as a Type Two on the world of Arsenal. Her life was that of a simple one, she tended to the Ley Line Gates on a daily basis, with single tasks of soldering together lines that needed to be connected, or replacing plating that had rusted to the point beyond use. Cinereal had taken notice in the Type Two that continued to work gleefully. The "little mouse" instantly responding to her orders and put her to the test: They gave her a different order; she was to push a button that would activate the gate after a Keeper had input the registration numbers. The only trick was that Cinereal didn't tell her where the button was and she was given a time limit. Honey had barely made it in time, and that opened the doors for her. Over time Cinereal tested her more and more, until the Type Two finally could do no more work as it was beyond repair. For her work, Cinereal granted the ascension to a Type Three to continue to serve and work on Arsenal.

As she awoke to the life of a Type Three, Honey found her thinking ability nearly limitless compared to her previous form. Almost overwhelmed, she stabilized her thoughts as Cinereal began to flood her mindware with the knowledge that would be necessary to join the Astral Locksmiths. Slowly and cautiously, she took up her work as a Gatekeeper for the Ley Line system, finding that she was adept at dealing with others in her own unusual way. Though she would butt heads with others in the polysentience, Honey got results.

Lately, she has been preparing her body to be a Type Four under the guidance of Cinereal. Replacing the majority of her body with cybernetics, the last remaining portions of her that are human are the vital organs and the lower half of her face.
