

LSDF Utility Chambers

Located at various points along utility passageways, utility chambers are locations in which certain utility lines intersect, and also serve as access points to adjoining systems. Along with serving as an access point, these chambers also can be used as storage spaces for engineering equipment, or parts. Often, LSDF engineers stash away equipment and supplies in these chambers which would be useful for the adjoining systems, allowing for repair crews to rapidly replace systems and parts in the event of an emergency, instead of having to leave the utility passage ways and rummage through a cargo hold. Some engineer crews also have rations and first aid supplies stored in these chambers for engineering crew use.
