The Firebrand Crew Jacket is issued by Vinni Firebrand to each active member of the Firebrand Crew after their first successful mission, it is taken away from the crew member once they disband and is buried with them upon death - unless the death is the result of a mutiny or any other action against the Firebrand Crew.

History

Vinni Firebrand decided that the Firebrand Crew needed some kind of way to set themselves apart from all the other crews they grinded gears with so in mid-YE 40 the fox-thing got to work ordering the tan and gold garments for their crew to wear proudly.

Design

The Firebrand Crew Jackets are made from an outermost layer of weather-proofed polyester in a tan colour with a dark strip that runs across both shoulders, it is a button and zip-up Utility-style jacket with the Firebrand Crew's logo on the left sleeve, a name above the right-breast pocket, their position/role across the shoulders and a pocket on either half of the abdomen as well as a hood capable of tightening to shield the user's face.

The jacket's core layer is made up of many segmented polymer plates designed to protect the user from small arms fire, stab wounds, grazes and blunt force trauma¹⁾, the jacket's inside is a breathable and treated mesh that is stain and odour resistant to avoid the need to wash it frequently. The left breast of the jacket is designed to be a space for crew members to wear any personal badges or emblems that have been approved by the ship's captain.

Usage

The Firebrand Crew Jacket is designed to be worn proudly over other gear unless the captain specifies otherwise, it has a seam across the front that can be both zippered or buttoned shut or worn undone - it is advised that crew members treat their crew jackets with respect and keep them both clean and in good condition.
