

Kyoto Academy for the Arts

The Kyoto Academy for the Arts, written in Yamataigo (邪馬台語) as 京都芸術学院, is a privately funded preparatory school that focuses on the arts and is located in Kyoto. It focuses on the preservation, development, and refinement of Yamataian cultural as well as the talents of its citizens.

History

The Kyoto Academy for the Arts existed unofficially for some time as an after school club in Geshrinopolis devoted to practicing the arts. The club operated without any formal structure for some time, eventually gathering enough revenue from membership dues to afford a club house in a cheap part of the city. The original lack of formal structure and the loss of records makes it difficult to determine exactly when the academy was founded. What is known is that they received a substantial donation from an alumnus of the club shortly before the destruction of Geshrinopolis, and were among the first to rebuild in the newly founded Kyoto, allowing them to secure a plot of land on which to build their campus around a central quad. As revenue from tuition grew so did the campus and the school, by YE 30 it had grown to the campus it is known for today.

In YE 40 criticism was leveled at the institution for its exclusive nature as a private school, and the lack of affordability for most Yamataians. As a result the school began to offer merit based scholarships for those students who demonstrated financial need and sufficient talent to merit acceptance to the school.

Description

The Kyoto Academy for the Arts has a small campus in Kyoto including boys, girls, and nonbinary dormitories along with a building full of lecture halls and offices, and a separate building dedicated to space to practice the arts including a large auditorium on which students of the performing arts give their recitals to the public.

Usage

While the school offers Elementary (Shōgakkō) level classes, students must commute to and from the school. Students of age to be in secondary school can use this academy to prepare them for applying to prestigious conservatories. Additionally students in secondary school are required to live on campus in one of the dormitories.
