

Shenhong City

A planned city located on Fujiko IV within the Fujiko System, Shenhong City was established to serve as the main headquarters of both the Ryu Keiretsu and Fujiko Development Corporation. It is also rumored to be a test on how to bring the Reds under control with a system of governance with plans to build additional cities within the region. It became open to migration in late YE 44 ¹⁾.

History

When the Ryu Keiretsu made plans to redevelop the Fujiko Region of the Yamatai Star Empire, they knew they were going to have problems initially integrating the Nepleslian Reds clones that made up the overwhelming percentage of the population. As rebuilding Red Sands City would be out of the question cleaning up the corruption would take both an internal and external approach, it was decided to build their own city in the “frontier”. Construction efforts were initially hampered on two fronts: the militia controlled construction guilds and squatters that claimed the vast area as their territory.

Choosing a “tropical” (temperate rainforest) location on the coast of the continent of Mai, RyuK survey teams were harassed by a “clan” of Red clones taking on the surname of O'Brian. Claiming the land has always been theirs since landfall, they “did not appreciate a bunch of cat lovers” coming in and taking their “hard fought” lands despite showing zero development beyond their tiny fishing village. Black Crane Securities escorts were enough to deter them from becoming more violent in their protests despite being given microapartments in the Shenfu District (close to their village several kilometers outside of the city limits.)

The real problem came in securing skilled labor for preparation of the land, construction of the city blocks buildings would be placed upon, and various other things that would be needed to complete the city's first phase. Guilds that did not actively boycott the presence of the RyuK and the city were charging greatly inflated fees as they felt like they had an opportunity to milk a cash cow. Especially as ones that didn't had a tendency to have their construction crews beaten by “random muggers” in the mobile work camps set up, shootings when in transit to the worksite, and equipment were regularly hacked to cause havoc. While Black Crane did their best to prevent the physical component, it was enough to scare all but the hardest of Reds and those with an axe to grind with the militias from wanting to be hired.

The solution ended up just building most large buildings and prefabricated buildings at the shipyard and manufacturing facilities of Port Jiyuu and the Hephaestus Class Industrial Vessel RKS Spirt of Change where production crews consisted of vetted Reds and Yamataians hired elsewhere. The ground work ended up being completed by androids and drones connected to local intranets, controlled by machine intelligence and individuals on site utilizing "puppeteer rigs" (protected by Black Crane Securities).

The city was formally founded in YE 44.7, experiencing an anticipated migration of Nepleslian Reds from Red Sands City looking for new opportunities.

Description

Shenhong City is located on the equatorial shores of the Mai continent. While still a rather cold environment, the waters of the Gulf of Erika is never frozen and the summers are decently comfortable with temperatures of 15 degrees Celcius. The terrain is dominated by coastal low mountains, plains, and forests. The city currently has a area of 69 square kilometers, but has a claim to 700 additional square kilometers of land (both inland and in surrounding waters) that it could expand into.

The city (much like most settlements on the planet) are protected with a Nepleslian Research and Manufacturing design shielding system that can act as a city defense shield. But its primary purpose is to reduce the planet's dense atmosphere (3.91 atm pressure) to a much more comfortable 1.91 atm.

Divided into 8 districts (listed below), Shenhong City inherited some of the planned city development typical of Tatiana. This is due to the majority of architects and engineers were hired directly from Tatiana and the desire from the Ryu-Mizumitsu Clan for a more nature friendly city compared to existing settlements. Especially since most of the planet is either ice or frozen tundra.

- Zhuhai District
- Jingdu District
- Shenfu District
- Hongling District
- Taimeng District
- Xinhe District
- Jishan Industrial Zone
- Yitian Industrial Zone

To entice and speed up migration, the RyuK built a number skyscrapers and prefabricated buildings in orbit from the shipyards of Port Orchid. Inspired by the Type 30 City Block, much of the city is built on top of prepared structures designed to support the weight of civilization. Skyscrapers have limited life support systems and engineering spaces that once held the anti-gravity drives used to place it into its foundation.

The tallest buildings and density is located around the center of the city. As you get further away from the central high density, neighborhoods quickly become less dense with lower ceiling limits for the buildings. The lowest density buildings are expected to be townhomes.

The architecture of the city favors towards 🏢 High-tech_architecture and Yamataian 🏢 postmodern_architecture.

Transportation

A vast metro system is the primary method of getting around Shenhong City. Residents of the city can easily get to any point of the city with a max number of transfers being 2 with bus stops being within 500 meters of walking (2km for tram stations). With the exception of a few hills, the city is largely flat making cycling attractive as well.

Unlike Tatiana, residents do have the option to use personal vehicles as well. Though since Fujiko IV lacks a well developed road system, most of the vehicles are small vehicles powered by hydrogen fuel cells. But there are plenty of highway ways and main roads to allow at least 2 alternative paths to a destination.

The city has a number of highway entry points and train stations built to connect the city to other settlements via a planned highway/maglav system. As of early YE 45, the primary means of entering and exiting the city is the Bao'an Starport built on an island made of reclaimed land. The Ryu Keiretsu is currently negotiating for a Ryu Shipping Lines ran PAINT lines to Rufusland, Ukmirt, Virginia, and Amatsu-Yamatai.

People

The majority of the new city's population are Nepleslian Reds and non-humans (Elysian and Kodians mostly) seeking to escape the chaos and corruption of Red Sands City. The city has also seen an influx of Yamataians and non-Red affiliated Nepleslians that were employees of the Ryu Keiretsu being transferred to the city from Tatiana.

As the city is located within a temperate rainforest in the tropics of Fujiko IV, the majority of the populations constantly dress in layers. Environmental skinsuits, hardsuits, climate-controlled jumpsuits, etc. remain popular items of fashion for the residents of Shenhong City. During the short summer, less layers of “normal” civilian attire is worn by locals. Naturally the majority of the residents from Red Sands City open carry pistols (and occasionally rifles) to deter would-be criminals while there and have continued to do so in Shenhong City.

The majority of the people speak in Trade \(language\) with Yamataigo \(邪馬台語\) making a close second.
